This first issue of volume 12 introduces a new format for the Australasian Journal of Logic. We now publish papers as they become ready. This means as soon as the final revisions of an accepted paper are in, we will format it and put it online. We retain the volume/issue format, but the issues may not be of even approximately the same length. It depends on how many papers we have ready at a given time. The advantage of the present approach over early online publishing done by print journals is that in the AJL papers have their final volume/issue/year/page numbers immediately when they are published online. This facilitates more uniform citation practices.
