

Contributors

Articles

Paul Moon is Professor of History at the Faculty of Maori Development at AUT University. He has written biographies of Governors Hobson and FitzRoy, and the Maori politician Hone Heke Ngapua.

Avril Bell is a Senior Lecturer in Sociology at the University of Auckland. Her research centres on settler colonialism, indigenous-settler relations and possibilities for decolonization. Her book, Relating Indigenous and Settler Identities: Beyond Domination, addresses these issues in four settler societies.

Paul Christoffel has a PhD from Victoria University of Wellington and has published on New Zealand's liquor laws and its censorship system. Over the past decade he has worked as an historian and historical advisor for the Waitangi Tribunal, the Office of Treaty Settlements, and Crown Law Office. In 2016 he completed a major report on Health, Housing, and Education for the Waitangi Tribunal's Taihape inquiry.

John Horrocks is a Research Associate at the Wellington Institute of Technology, where his publications have included articles on the historical diagnosis of neurasthenia and its treatments. He has also written about the war novels of New Zealand's John A Lee.

Rosi Crane is a researcher at the University of Otago, with expertise in Cultural History, History of Art, and History of Science.

Anna Boswell is a teacher and researcher at the University of Auckland. She talks and writes about settler colonialism in terms of ecology and pedagogy, and has been awarded a Marsden Fund Fast Start grant by the Royal Society of New Zealand for a research project examining zoos and wildlife sanctuaries in the settler south (2016-19).

Book Reviews

Angela Ballara is one of New Zealand's foremost academic authorities on Māori customary history. Her books include Taua: 'Musket Wars', 'Land Wars' or Tikanga? – Warfare in Māori Society in the Early Nineteenth Century (2003), Iwi: The Dynamics of Māori Tribal Organisation, c1769–c1945 (1998), and Proud to be White? A Study of Racial Prejudice in New Zealand (1986).

Aroha Harris is a Senior Lecturer in History at the University of Auckland.

Basil Keane is a Senior Researcher - Kairangahau Matua – at the New Zealand Council for Educational Research.

Nēpia Mahuika is a senior lecturer at the University of Waikato. He teaches New Zealand History, Māori and Indigenous Histories, Oral History, and Historical Methodology.

Geoff Troughton is a senior lecturer in Religious Studies at Victoria University of Wellington. His research and teaching focuses primarily on religion in New Zealand, the history of Christianity, and questions relating to religion, politics and society.

Lydia Wevers is the Director of the Stout Research Centre for New Zealand Studies, a New Zealand literary critic, English language literary historian, editor, and book reviewer. She also reviews books for 'Nine to Noon' on National Radio as well as major newspapers, journals, and magazines.